

- Reduces the load that glider structures must support during landing and rollout.

The performance advantage of water ballast during strong soaring conditions is considerable. However, there is a down side. The pilot should be aware that water ballast degrades takeoff performance, climb rate, and low-speed handling. Before committing to a launch with water ballast aboard, the pilot should review operating limitations to ensure that safety of flight is not compromised.